The role of staff officers is to solve, and not make, problems for their superiors. Adhering to this philosophy both [REDACTED] and myself have spent considerable time in recent weeks sizing the problems encountered by the Procurement Division of the Office of Logistics in negotiating our contracts. We have endeavored, in conversations with the Director of Logistics, to develop new procedures to more speedily effect negotiations on certain types of contracts.

In the meanwhile I think you should be made aware of the number of contract negotiation requests we now have on file with Logistics which as yet have not been finalized. Such requests total 44 in number with an approximate dollar value of [REDACTED]. In certain of the listed cases, we know that verbal authorization has been given, i. e.,
